

At two years of age I live in Southern Thailand. This is right before I got glasses.

Third grade, this is my first year in public school (as opposed to homeschooling). My first memories of being in the US are snow, M&Ms, school busses, tonsillitis, and pneumonia.

I'm a sophomore in high school, living in boarding school in Bangkok. A friend gave me the dress, it came from America and was too small for her, and I loved it. I wore it to church every Sunday until everyone was sick of it.

My mother made this dress for me, and it was one of my favorites. I still have it packed away in my memories box. I am now a senior in high school. The first time she made it she made the mistake of not washing the material first, and it shrank up too small to wear. We then bought more cloth and made a second dress, after washing the cloth first this time. :)

This year, while on vacation in Malaysia, I was playing at the creek below the waterfall. I was forbidden to get in the cold water so was jumping onto a rock when I bumped into my best friend, knocking my glasses off into the deep water. While my parents were very unhappy with me, it forced me to go without glasses for three months until we could get back to Bangkok, which strengthened my eyes enough that I no longer needed glasses. Yay!

I'm now a sophomore at Morehead State University in Kentucky. This is me with my roommate Kit Chi Tam from Hong Kong, sitting in front of our dorm. I loved that blouse she's wearing and borrowed it from her whenever she wasn't wearing it. I met my husband Terry about this time. Having hair so long I could sit on it helped catch his eye. :)

This is the only wedding picture I can find at the moment, so it will have to do. I do look happy! It's been almost 32 years now, and I've always said that I was born to be a wife and mother. :)

I love being married!

Terry and I have now been married about three years, and I've just cut my long hair (it was tough, but he still loved me). I work for the local photographer, an old family friend (which is why I got the job). This is Zeke, our Grey-Cheeked Parakeet, (they're now illegal to own, this was around 1979). He was great fun!

How young we look in this picture! Our oldest, Jeremy (26), and his wonderful wife Jessica have given us our first grandchild, Kinsey. Our daughter Jessie (22) is a senior at Eastern Kentucky University, and our youngest son, Chris (20), has his own apartment, works full-time, and is planning to return to college in the fall. It's been a long time since they were this small!

I'm Kinsey's grandmother!
